

Models for Change Exhibition

Process Book

Brendan Cecere, Stephanie Dykes, Hao Wu

Visual Culture and Design

12/11/2017

Inspiration for Exhibition

The main inspiration for choosing to focus on the five values came from another project where an Atlanta-based icon was celebrated for his accomplishments in Advocacy, Education, Leadership, Resistance, Freedom, and Legacy. We felt analyzing a person through these types of categories would be more meaningful than simply re-stating facts about their life. We ended up adopting the values of Advocacy, Education, Leadership, and Legacy while adding Community because it was a better fit for the women in our project; the intention was to show “who” these women were, not just “what” they were.

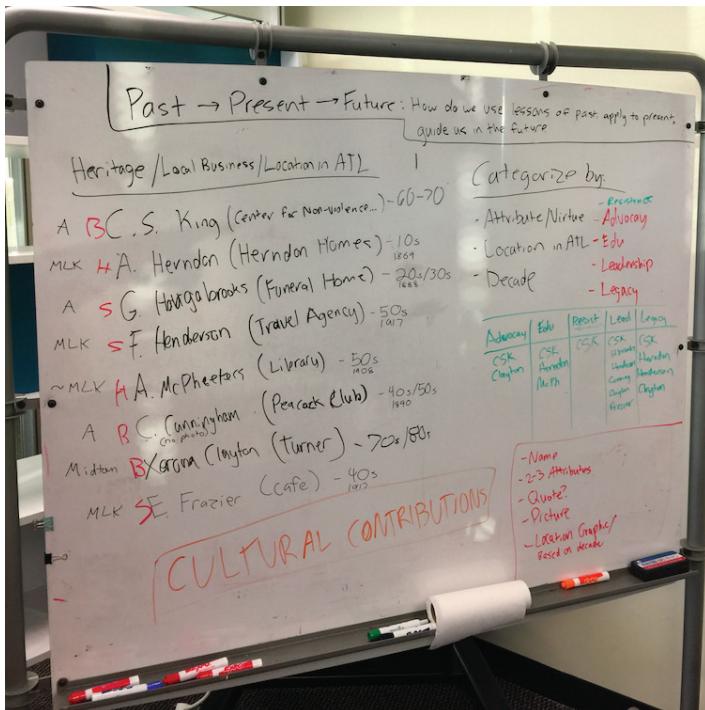

Another theme we wanted to focus on was “using the past to inform the present and change future”. The five values also work well into this theme because they are timeless. People today can look at how the women exemplified leadership or advocacy in the context of their time, and hopefully be inspired to do something positive in a similar fashion.

Phase 1: Amalgamation

GENERAL CONTENT

The first name we decided to give our exhibition was “Perspectives on Civil Rights in Atlanta”. We chose this name because we saw the five values as different “perspectives” from which to look at the women’s contributions. Also, the digital map component we were planning at the time offered a different “perspective” from which to look at the information presented.

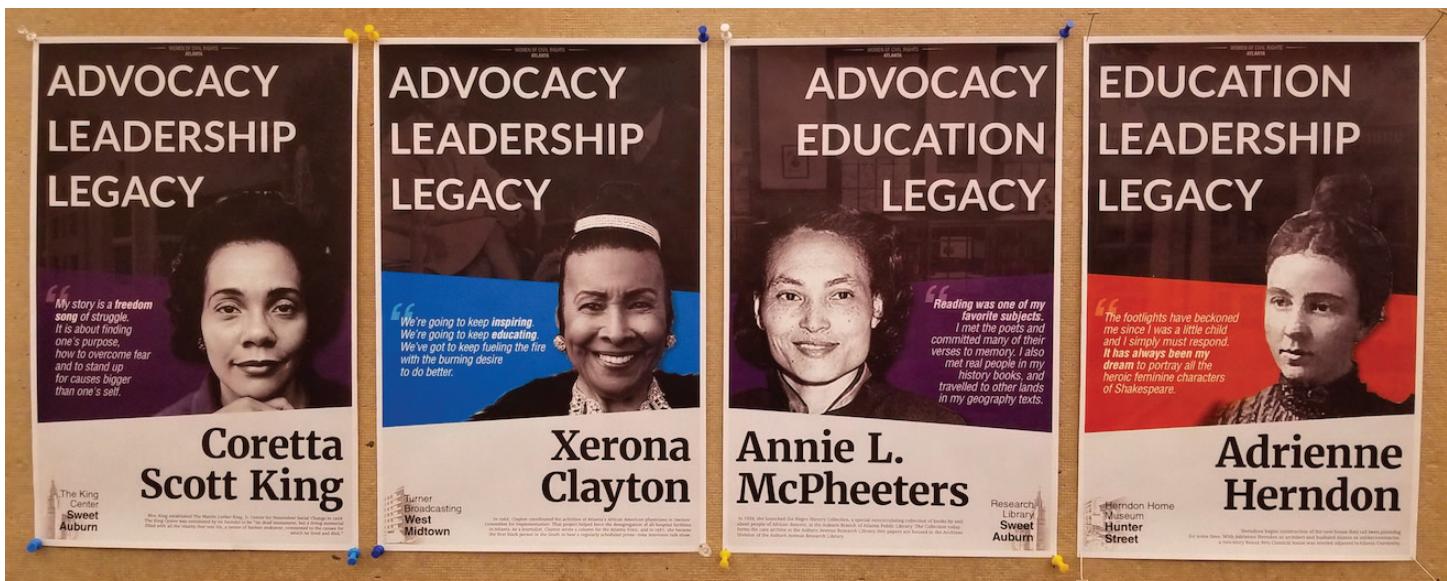

POSTERS

We began the poster series by deciding which women we would feature, as well as brainstorming potential themes. We began with a large list incorporating more than we would need in the final product, in order to explore possibilities.

We drew up a timeline and listed possible thematic connections between the featured women, including location, decade, realm of contributions, and admirable attributes. Ultimately, it was decided upon that location and attributes would be the driving factor for the first poster series, with a historical digital map artifact planned to accompany them.

After landing on an initial theme, we agreed upon an layout which took the best elements from each of our project 2 poster series. This layout incorporated a relaxed diagonal grid line, a portrait, pop of color based on a hue relevant to the individual portrayed, and a subtle background image for setting.

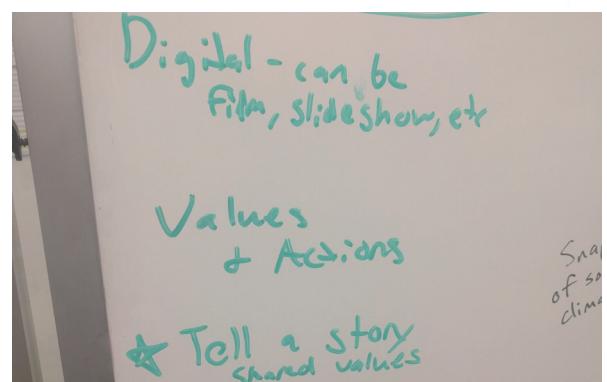

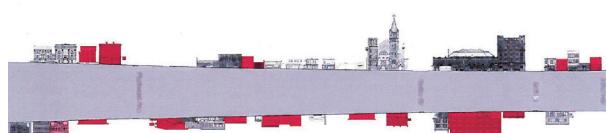

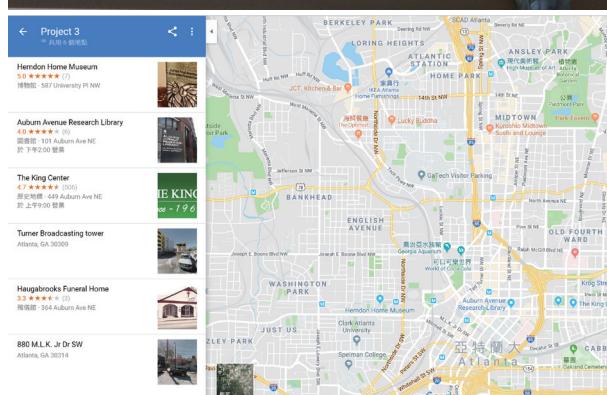

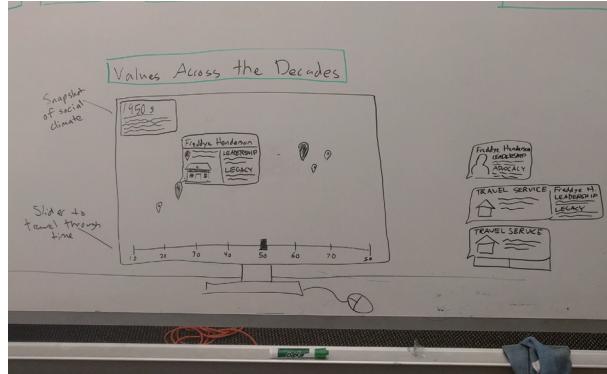

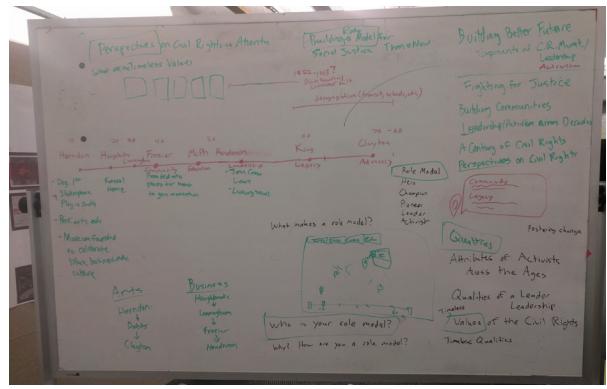

DIGITAL ARTIFACT

We first started brainstorming around the “perspective” on civil rights on Atlanta to figure out the theme of the digital part. After checking out several possible themes, we finally stuck on perspectives of “time” and “location” to show the legacy the female activists left and how their achievements changed Atlanta over time.

Initially, we planned to show a map with all the legacies highlighted. The audience could choose a time period and the old map of that time would show the significant locations about civil rights corresponding to that time period.

Then, we collected a lot of old maps and pinned all the locations on Google map but found that the information was out-of-order. Some of them were really far away from each while some else gathered at one place. Therefore, we categorized the locations into the areas where the women were located (Sweet Auburn, Hunter St, and West Midtown) to make the information more clear and understandable. As the picture at the top-left corner shows, we used the watermark to indicate the area which the women belonged to.

After finishing the prototype of the map, we found that the lack of connection between the posters and the digital part was more serious than we expected because the digital part did not highlight the values from posters.

Phase 2: Refinement and Re-focus

GENERAL CONTENT

We did more brainstorming around how to better frame our exhibition. We eventually introduced the concept of “role models” and positioned each woman as a civil rights role model and each of the five values are elements that a good role model would exemplify. The role model direction also fits into the “past, present, future” theme because viewers can reflect on their personal role models or even think about how they themselves can be role models. We wanted to extend viewer engagement to actually posing a question like “who is your role model?” or “how are you a role model in your community?”. Ideally, we would provide a whiteboard/chalkboard and allow viewers to publicly write down their answers for others to see. Finally, to better frame our posters in terms of role models, we added a banner above the set which posed the question “what makes a role model?”; each of the 5 values on the posters are meant to be the answers to this question.

POSTERS

After receiving feedback that the values were hard to parse, our group chose to narrow down each poster’s focus a single value per woman. We also added two points of information per poster to show how the woman exemplified that value. We wanted to hone in on the idea that each was a different perspective lens through which one could look at the civil rights movement to better align with our title, Perspectives on Civil Rights.

The image shows five vertical posters from the 'Perspectives on Civil Rights' exhibition, each featuring a different woman as a role model. The posters are titled 'ADVOCACY', 'EDUCATION', 'LEGACY', 'COMMUNITY', and 'LEADERSHIP'. Each poster includes a portrait of the woman, a brief bio, and a quote.

- ADVOCACY: Xerona Clayton. Bio: Helped the desegregation of Atlanta schools in Atlanta. First African American to share host in the South on the Atlanta Chapter Show. Quote: "We're going to keep inspiring. We've got to keep fueling the fire with the burning desire to do better."
- EDUCATION: Annie L. McPheeeters. Bio: One of the first African Americans to attend Atlanta Public Library. Developed several Atlanta library initiatives including the Multi-Sectoral Project. Quote: "Reading was one of my favorite subjects. I met the poets and community leaders whose verses to memory. I also met real people in my history books, and travelled the world in my geography texts."
- LEGACY: Coretta Scott King. Bio: Established The Martin Luther King, Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change. Lobbied for a national holiday honoring her husband — Martin Luther King Day. Quote: "My story is a freedom song of struggle. It is about finding one's purpose, how to overcome fear and stand up for causes bigger than one's self."
- COMMUNITY: Evelyn J. Frazier. Bio: Founded Frazier's Cafe Society, Inc., a non-profit organization bringing together a still segregated population. Facilitated civil, political, and religious groups to organize in a public space. Quote: "She was very strong and her business have everything first class available to them"
- LEADERSHIP: Freddiee Henderson. Bio: Founded Freddiee Travel Service, the first full-service black travel agency. Presented tour to Africa at a time when no commercial flight was publicly available. Quote: "She was truly a great Atlanta legend. A barrier-breaker, a bridge-builder."

We chose 'Advocacy' for Clayton because of her talk show and founding of the Trumpet Awards.

We chose 'Education' for McPheeeters because of her involvement with Atlanta libraries and African American education programs.

We chose 'Legacy' for King because she established The King Center and fought to make MLK Day a national holiday.

We chose 'Community' for Frazier because she brought community members together through organized meeting spaces.

We chose 'Leadership' for Henderson because of her entrepreneurial spirit.

The main feedback we received was that ‘Legacy’ seemed like a value equally shared amongst all the women. It was suggested that we move ‘Leadership’ to Coretta Scott King and give Henderson a new value: ‘Experience’. Experience works as a value for Henderson because she allowed African Americans to experience the world through her travel agency and a experience is a valuable characteristic of a role model.

DIGITAL ARTIFACT

We decided to ditch the map and focus on the timeline to create a more consistent experience. Inspired by the exhibition in Atlanta History Center, we designed a vertical scrolling timeline for our digital part which could include all the eight women we selected at first.

In details, the timeline consists of a bunch of vertically arranged panels. Each panel shows the date and the associated event described with one or two sentences and values as tags. Clicking the panel, users will be navigated to the details page which includes all the five values with the context of what the woman did to display the values as a role model.

Discover how these notable civil rights role models left their mark on Atlanta's history.
Click on any event to see other ways in which they exemplified the values of advocacy, education, leadership, community, and experience.

•1910
Adrienne Herndon
Built the house which became the Herndon House Meseum later with Alonzo Herndon
EDUCATION ADVOCACY COMMUNITY

•1929
Geneva Haugabrooks
Founded the Haugabrooks Funeral Home on Auburn Ave.
LEADERSHIP COMMUNITY

•1946
Evelyn J. Frazier
Founded Frazier's Cafe Society as a meeting place for community organizations
EXPERIENCE COMMUNITY

Based on the feedback from the classmates and our own critique, we found the issues which needed to be solved:

1. The tags looked like buttons.
2. More general contexts of civil rights events was expected.
3. The details pages were too boring and more multimedia materials could be included.
4. We still needed text to tie the whole exhibition together
5. We should come up with better title(s)
6. An introduction paragraph should be used to connect the digital part to the posters.

What makes Coretta Scott King a role model?

ADVOCACY
Mrs. King formed a broad coalition of over 100 religious, labor, business, civil and human rights organizations dedicated to a national policy of full employment and equal economic opportunity.

EDUCATION
Mrs. King conceived and performed a series of critically acclaimed Freedom Concerts, containing poetry, narration and music to tell the story of the Civil Rights Movement.

LEADERSHIP
Mrs. King founded and directed great energy and commitment to building and developing programs for the Atlanta-based Martin Luther King, Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change.

COMMUNITY
Mrs. King served on a host of committees to support the struggle against homophobia and anti-gay bias which was met with criticism. She said that Martin Luther King's message to the world was one of respect and inclusion.

EXPERIENCE
Mrs. King met with a host of political leaders, including prime ministers and presidents. She also met with many great spiritual leaders, including Pope John Paul, the Dalai Lama, Dorothy Day and Bishop Desmond Tutu.

What makes Annie L. McPheeters a role model?

ADVOCACY
In 1958, Mrs. McPheeters moved to the newly built West Branch and campaigned for library access that allowed for and won desegregation of the Atlanta Public Library in 1959.

EDUCATION
Mrs. McPheeters provided literacy services and resources to segregated communities through educational programs for children.

LEADERSHIP
In 1968, the first year of her service at the Auburn Branch, Mrs. McPheeters and her Adult Education Department organized a voter registration drive, a event that drew 1,200 African Americans to register and 2000 people of African descent.

COMMUNITY
In 1968, with the growing African American population in Verdell community, #Brand Atlanta, Mrs. McPheeters moved to the Auburn Branch, where she became the Director. Director McPheeters moved to erect the West Branch and took on the responsibility of the library and continue to serve the communities.

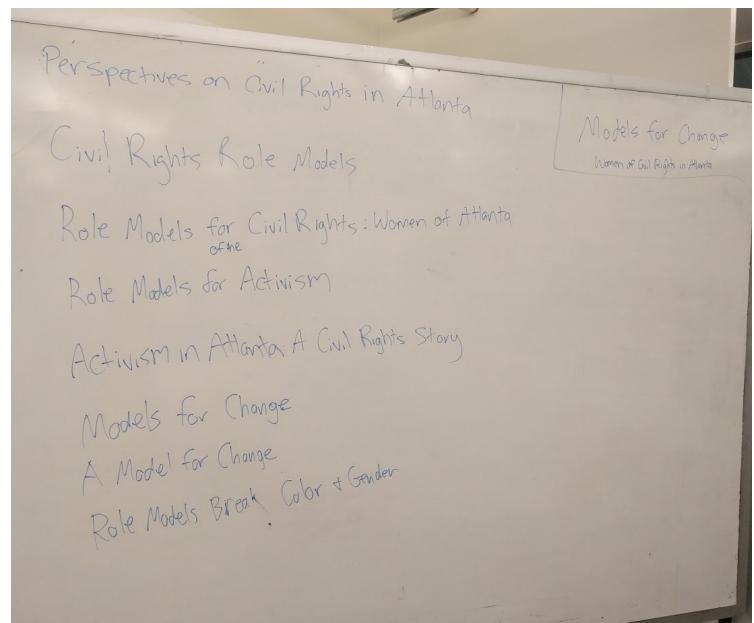

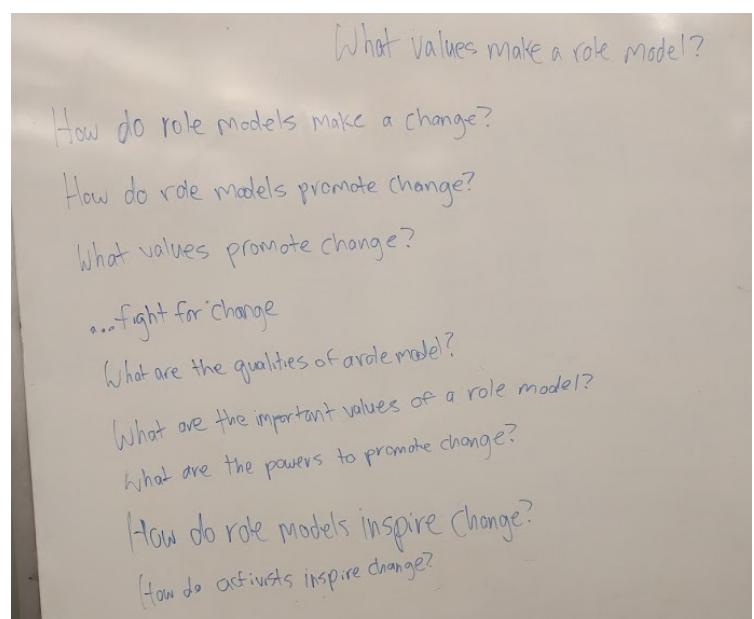

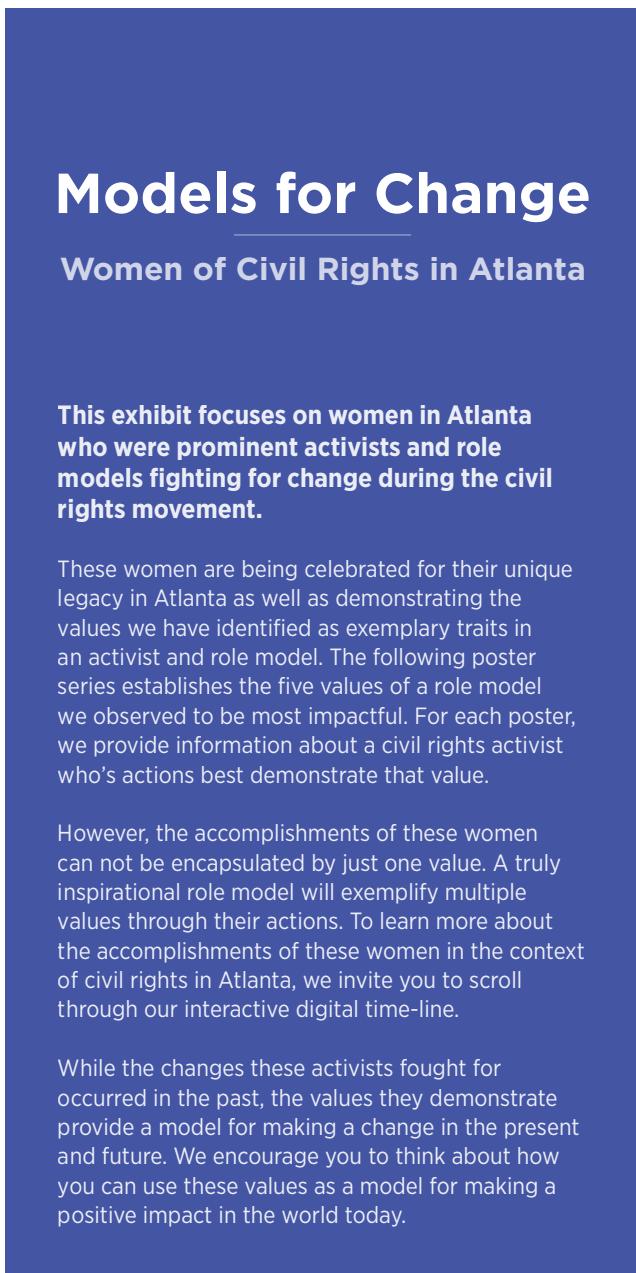

EXPERIENCE
Mrs. McPheeters became a vocal supporter of the new Auburn Research Library and was present at the library's grand opening in May 1994.

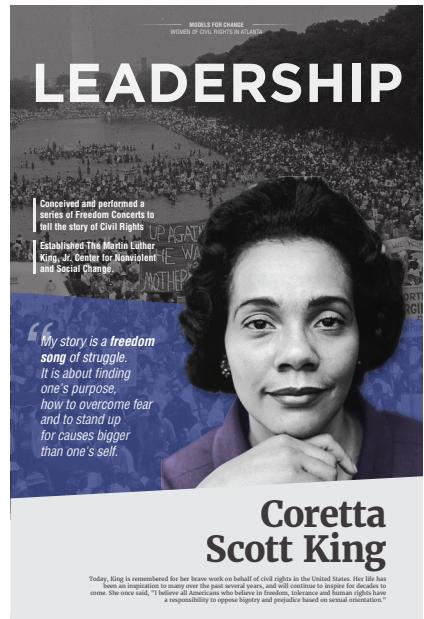

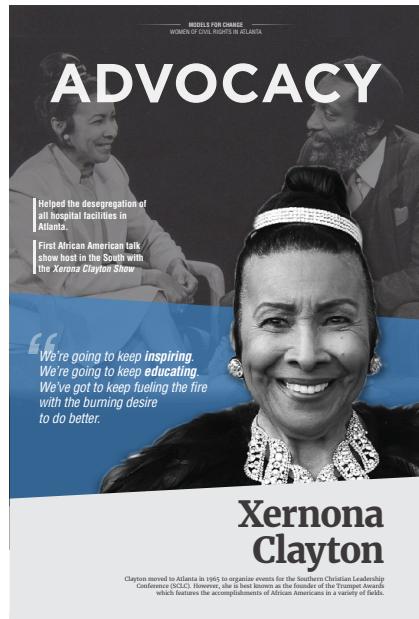

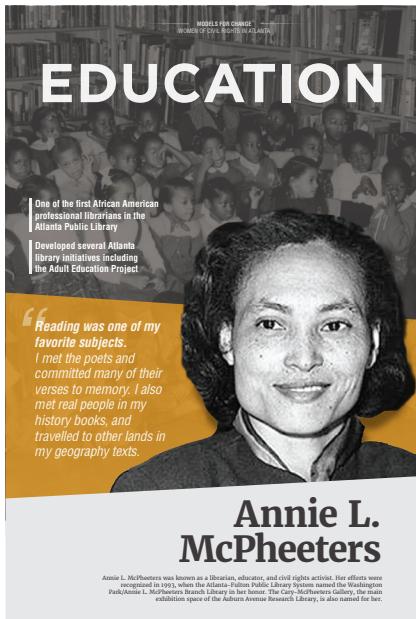

Phase 3: Models for Change

GENERAL CONTENT

To finalize the exhibition, we needed wanted to rename the exhibition and add an intro paragraph to help explain the women we chose, the five values, and the overall objective. We also wanted to reword the question in the banner over the posters and added some text to the top of the digital component to better frame what was being presented. After more brainstorming, we came up with the title “Models for Change” because the women were role models fighting for change and their actions can be used as a model on how to make a difference in the world.

Based on the new title, we changed the poster question to “How do role models inspire change?”. We also officially named the digital component “Moments of Change” to reflect the timeline functionality.

POSTERS

The final poster edits only included minor tweaks to colors, font sizes, and layout. We ultimately reduced the height of the bottom section, made the names smaller, and made the detail text more pronounced. We also removed the watermarks since we were no longer using a map in the digital artifact.

We also used Google Material Design colors with each woman. These colors will also appear in the digital component to help viewer recognition. Finally, we changed the graphic on each poster to match the new title to visually tie them to the rest of the exhibition.

DIGITAL ARTIFACT

To solve the existing issues, we included values in the event text instead of using the tags, added important dates for civil rights events to create general context, re-styled the detail pages to make each value a whole section and included pictures and more details about what the woman did.

To avoid overwhelming information and create a more consistent experience, we reduced the women included in the timeline back down to five from eight to match the posters.

Coretta Scott King

What makes her a civil rights role model?

ADVOCACY

Advocate for Civil Rights
King conceived and performed a series of "freedom concerts" which consisted of poetry recitation, singing, and lectures demonstrating the history of the civil rights movement.

Advocate for Women
King called for women to "unite and find the strength of women power to fight the three great evils of racism, poverty and war" during a Solidarity Day speech.

Advocate for Equal Employment
In 1974 Mrs. King formed a broad coalition of over 100 religious, labor, business, civil and women's rights organizations dedicated to a national policy of full employment and equal economic opportunity.

EDUCATION

Educating for Social Change
King founded the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Change on Auburn Ave. The King Center was intended to be "no dead monument, but a living memorial filled with all the vitality that was his, a center of human endeavor, committed to the principles he believed in and died." That vision was carried out through educational and community programs.

Moments of Change

A contextual view of the accomplishments made by female activists in Atlanta

Click on an event to learn more about the values that make these women great.

Atlanta Race Riot
• 1906
Jim Crow laws passed in the following several years

Residential Segregation
• 1913
City of Atlanta created official boundaries for black and white residential areas

Evelyn J. Frazier
• 1946
founded Frazier's Cafe Society, establishing a community meeting spot and providing a rare first class dining experience to patrons

Annie L. McPheeeters
• 1946
Became first African-American reference librarian and provided library services and resources to segregated communities through educational programs.

Brown vs Board of Education
• 1954
Landmark Supreme Court case desegregated public schools

Freddye Henderson
• 1955
established the first full service black travel agency, enabling blacks to travel & experience the world

The Final Outcome

